Good butter has no stronger odor.
It is of an even, golden yellow and has a fine grain; it sticks to the butter properly handled. It should never be marbled in appearance. If there is too great proportion of moisture present the butter breaks easily. In this case the purchaser pays for it. These butter should be of good color, dependent on the variety, and of fine grain. The color of the butter should be a quality not of the best quality; if the fat separates from the body of the butter, rapidly it usually indicates the addition of foreign fat.
